The aquarium doesn't open till ten a.m., so when I saw a young boy in the exhibition area while I was cleaning the shark tank, I knew it meant trouble. As I was swimming towards him, I did my best to stay calm. Years of experience have taught me that sharks can sense fear. I tried to get his attention and tell him to stay quiet but, unfortunately, he started tapping on the glass. As soon as the sharks heard the noise, they started moving around wildly. One of the most important safety rules is to get out of the water if a shark is acting strangely. So, when one of the sharks bumped my leg, I didn't think twice. Fortunately, when I reached the surface, my co-worker pulled me out immediately. 'I apologise for my son!' he said. 'I told him to stay in my office, but he didn't listen to me!'

Last week, we were filming a car chase scene on an icy road. Car chases are very common in my profession, but this time I had to do something totally new. I had to jump my car across a river. While the director and I were talking about the details, the experts were making sure that everything was safe. I was looking forward to the scene! As soon as I heard the director say 'action!', I sped along the icy road. The other car followed. I was getting ready for the jump when, all of a sudden, something reddish-brown appeared a few metres away. I found out later that it was a fox! I hit the brakes and held my breath. Unfortunately, the road was too slippery. The airbags opened when the car hit the river – so I didn't get injured – but the water was freezing cold!

Read

A Read the introduction on the right and look at the picture below accompanying the extract from an adapted tale about Robin Hood. Can you guess what the extract is about?

B Read the extract. Four sentences are missing. Complete blanks 1-4 with the sentences a-d below. Then listen and check your answers.

A Tale of ROBIN HOOD

On the day of the archery competition, Nottingham Town was full of people. The Sheriff sent messengers all over the country. He wanted Robin Hood to hear about the competition and come to take part. The Sheriff was planning on finally catching him there. This time he wanted to succeed.

The archers all gathered in the field with their bows and arrows and the Sheriff looked carefully to see if Robin Hood was there. Robin Hood always wore green clothes. 1 .....

The men began to shoot, and the crowd cheered loudly. They were the best archers in the country! 2 ..... One was a famous archer called Gilbert, the second was a man called Adam, and the third was a stranger. He had dark brown hair and wore a red jacket, but no one knew his name.

‘Could that stranger be Robin Hood?’ the Sheriff asked one of his soldiers.

‘No. Robin Hood has fair hair,’ the soldier replied.

‘Then he has not come,’ said the Sheriff angrily.

Gilbert shot first. His arrow almost hit the centre, and the crowd cheered. It was a good shot and they were sure Gilbert was the winner.

It was time for the stranger to shoot. His arrow flew very close to Gilbert’s and sliced off one of the feathers. 3 .....

The other archer, Adam, shook his head.

‘I will not compete today’ he said, ‘I’m not good enough. I cannot shoot as well as this stranger.’ With that, he left the field.

The Sheriff approached the stranger.

‘You have won,’ he said. ‘Take this golden arrow as your prize. You are the best archer in Nottingham.’

4 ..... He was too scared to show his face here today.’

Long ago, no rich man could pass through Sherwood Forest near Nottingham Town without meeting the famous archer, Robin Hood. Times were hard in England, and Robin Hood stole money from the rich and gave it to the poor. He believed rich people’s laws were unfair for poor people. The poor people loved him, but the Sheriff of Nottingham hated him and wanted to arrest him. Robin Hood tricked him many times, and the Sheriff could never find him because he always hid in the forest. So, he decided to hold an archery competition to make Robin Hood come out of the forest and into Nottingham Town.

- However, no one was dressed in that colour.
- Then it landed exactly in the centre of the target.
- All of them shot well, but among them were three men who stood out.
- In fact, I believe you are better than Robin Hood.

- Read the whole text first and then the sentences given.
- Pay attention to the development of the story, the vocabulary, as well as to pronouns (it, they, this, etc.) and words/phrases which link sentences (however, later, etc.) both in the text and in the sentences given.

B ROLE PLAY

Choose one of the situations shown in the pictures. Talk in pairs.

A walk in the rainforest

Steve didn't go to school yesterday because he had a stomach ache. He spent the morning reading about rainforests. However, after a while, he started feeling sleepy and closed his eyes.

Suddenly, he had a strange feeling. He thought someone was staring at him. He immediately sat up in bed – but he wasn't in bed at all! He was in the rainforest. All of a sudden, he felt a hand on his shoulder. Steve turned to look and found himself face-to-face with a monkey. He was so shocked that he held his breath! He remembered reading that monkeys can sometimes attack humans, so he slowly started walking away. Then, he decided to call for help. As he was taking his mobile out of his pocket, the monkey jumped down from the branch, grabbed it and disappeared. 'Hey! Come back here!' Steve shouted. To his surprise, more than twenty monkeys appeared. They were making noises and looked like they were ready to attack. Steve fainted.

When he woke up, he was not in the rainforest any longer. Fortunately, it was all a dream! He felt so relieved!
